The UNC Charlotte Religious Studies M.A. program offers small classes, seminars, directed studies, conferences, and colloquia that encourage vibrant interaction with peers and faculty.

We will help you prepare for further graduate work in Religious Studies or other humanities disciplines at the Ph.D. level. 81% of our students who have applied to Ph.D. programs have gained admission.

Other graduates of our program have chosen to take teaching positions at community colleges. The skills we provide can also prepare you for professional careers in non-academic settings.

Our graduate faculty possess expertise in religion in the United States, ancient Mediterranean religions, Judaism, Christianity, Hinduism, African American religions, media and religion, theory and method, and the critical roles played by race, gender, class, and politics in the study and practice of religion.

We also offer a limited number of graduate assistantships to provide financial support for our students. Visit our website for more details: ReligiousStudies.uncc.edu.
